Local TV and radio stations take seriously the responsibility that the freedom of press grants them under the First Amendment. Broadcasters are committed to reporting the facts, giving people the knowledge they need to be informed citizens.

Even with millions of sources for information in this digital age, Americans turn to local radio and television stations first to learn the truth.

Local broadcasters help us follow the inspiring events that shape our nation, and mourn together when our friends and neighbors are hurting.

From the inspirational first Moon landing to the tragedy of 9-11, Americans have relied on broadcasters to bring the news that impacts our lives into our cars and living rooms, and now to our mobile devices.

It's no wonder that we turn to those in our own community to bring us the critical news and information we need most.
